It seemed a mischievous creature; artd any of the children whom it could master, it would beat and scratch without mercy. It was once abusing a child belonging to Moffat, and he, in a passion, struck it so violent a blow upon the head, that it tumbled upon the ground; but it was not stunned; for it set up its head directly, and exclaimed, Ah hah, Will o Moffat, you strike sair; (viz. sore.) One evening, when the women were milking the cows in the loan, it was playing among the children near by, when suddenly they heard a loud shrill voice cry three times, Gilpin Horner! It started and said, That fs me, I must away, and instantly disappeared and was never heard of more. To this account, I have to add...
