You did; and I should be glad to hear it, especially as I understand it is otherwise written in other parts of his books; though I also have learned, in some measure, to distinguish between the letter and the spirit of a mans writings, knowing that there are many who seem to err in the letter, thaTarte yet not erroneous in spirit; and many again, who are very clear in the letter, that are altogether heretics in spirit. Eld. I trust, however, you do not mean to apply this to Mr. Huntington; for, I confess, I have a great respect for his memory. Young By no means the latter part of the, sentence: I only meant to intimate, that he, or any one else, might be a little inconsistent with themselves in the letter, and yet be quite consistent in spirit. Eld. Well, then, to bring the matter to a close, you will find, in his Discourse on the Dimensions of Eternal Love, the following very apposite passage. But my dear hearers (mark thaO may object and say, your text treats only of the love of Christ. I answer, when we speak of the love of Christ, we do not exclude the love of the Father, nor of the Spirit, for it is one love. The glorious Trinity loved the elect from everlasting. But of each of those in particular, and so forth. PART III. Eld. That the love of Christ, indeed,...
