Condition: New. Publisher/Verlag: LAP Lambert Academic Publishing | Differential and Difference Equations | We establish a global convergence result for the higher order difference equation where k is a positive integer and are positive initial conditions and then apply this result to show that, under appropriate hypotheses, every positive solution of the difference equation, converges to a period p solution, where the period p is easily determined in terms of the coefficients. Also we present some known results and derive several new ones on the boundedness and the global stability of the solutions of the difference equation We study the global stability, the boundedness nature, and the periodic character of the positive solutions of the difference equation which is interesting in its own right, but which may also be viewed as describing a population model. We obtain some sufficient conditions for the existence of the solutions and the asymptotic behavior of both linear and nonlinear system of differential equations with continuous coefficients and piecewise constant argument of the form. | Format: Paperback | Language/Sprache: english | 160 gr | 108 pp.
